HANDWOVEN AND SUSTAINABLE NATURAL FIBER CLOTHING

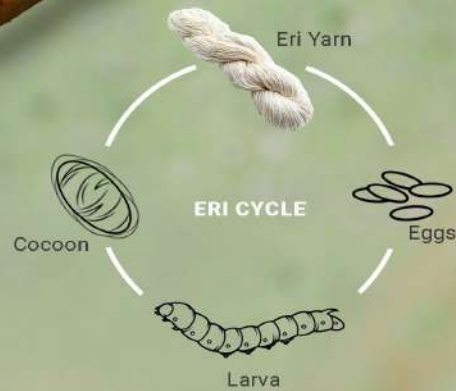

Uniqueness of Handwoven Material

Handwoven textiles hold significant importance for encompassing cultural, economic, environmental, and social aspects. It is often a sustainable practice. While contributing to the economic empowerment of artisan communities it is also a testament to the skill and artistry of individual artisans. They represent traditional craftsmanship, weaving techniques passed down through generations, and the unique stories of the communities creating them. Each piece becomes a cultural artifact, preserving heritage and identity. Each handwoven textile piece is unique. The variability in colors, patterns, and textures is a result of the human touch, making each item a one-of-a-kind work of art. So, in this endeavour we help you discover the undeniable allure and eco-friendly elegance of natural fiber clothing.

Sustainability is Future

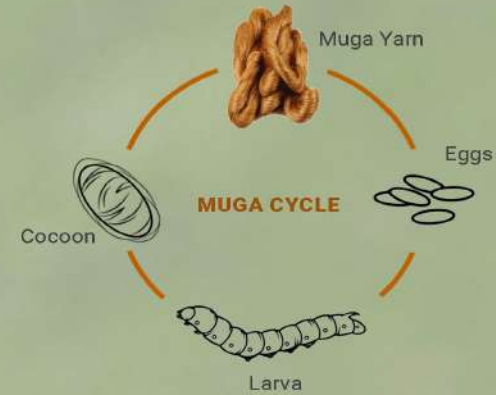

Sustainable clothing materials refer to fabric that comes from eco-friendly resources, like sustainably grown fiber crops. So, how about a fashion choice that transcends trends and transforms the way you dress while contributing to a greener, more sustainable world? The answer lies in handwoven textiles, it has always been a sustainable practice since ages. In an era defined by environmental consciousness, the textile industry is undergoing a sustainable revolution. A surge in demand for eco-friendly alternatives has paved the way for fabrics made from organic materials. This sustainable approach to fabric production is redefining the industry's environmental impact. Not only it provides unparalleled comfort but it aids to boost performance in terms of global sustainability.

EXCLUSIVE MATERIALS AND PROCESS

Eri

Eri silk, also called Ahimsa silk or peace silk is a non-violent silk. Eri silk is used for weaving primarily in India's Northeast region. It has some unique features like softness, warmth and moisture absorbency. In comparison to other silks, Eri has better warmth, pliability and suppleness aided by elasticity and resilience that gives excellent drape-ability. It is an eco-friendly fiber and is sustainable. Because of all these unique properties, it is also known as an all-weather fibre.

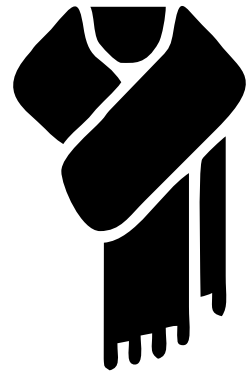

Muga

Assam is the only place in the world where a precious golden coloured luxurious yarn considered as “the queen of fibre” is abundantly grown. It is because of the climatic condition of the region which suits the growth and development of Muga silk in Assam. The golden Muga silk is the gift of nature to the state and is the “Pride of Assam”. It has its unique qualities such as sumptuous, royal, and lustrous. The most distinctive quality of Muga silk is that it can filter most of harmful UV rays of the Sun.
